“ I let too many years go by without contact. There was no falling out, just life getting in the way. Luckily we had an opportunity to reconnect in September and again at Thanksgiving. She had the same twinkle in her eyes and big laugh. On the last day, we watched Schitts Creek, which she had not seen before. I was worried that the language and innuendo might be too much, but those were the times she laughed the hardest. She was one of two people who called me kiddo even as my AARP card showed up in the mail. I love you Aunt Elaine and will miss you much more than you know. ❤️

“ My mom had a rough go of it in March. . . in and out of ICU, rehab, and back into ICU. She never really complained of the difficulty breathing. Mom didn't care too much that she didn't have WTTW as one of her channels, she had her Jeopardy. And she just shrugged off the fact that cell reception was poor. But I was definitely contacted on more than one occasion because the kitchen continued to send her unacceptable eggs in the morning. And the supply-line of Ensure wasn't quite up to speed. So my brother Dave actually had a case of Ensure delivered to the rehab center for her. We of course were locked out during the last seven or so days before she passed. But we made sure she knew she wasn't alone and that we were with her every step of the way. We did our best to educate the cooking staff how to prepare a decent scrambled egg. She actually ate half of her breakfast the previous morning. My compliments to the chef.

Mom doesn't have to worry any more. She's in good hands. May she rest in peace.
